Suggestion	I have a suggestion regarding parking problem in residential colonies. For e.g., In my locality, every house has on an average two-three cars, which are parked on the roadside. As a result, currently, there is no space for children to enjoy simple pleasures, like riding a cycle, for residents to even walk without looking out for speeding vehicles and frequent quarrels and social disharmony due to narrow space available for vehicles and residents to negotiate in streets. There are large parks in the colony. If only, Govt develops adequate underground parking below these parks, and makes it mandatory for all residents to park their vehicles in these parking; a lot of free space will be generated at street level with ease of movement and sufficient parking too. The top of these parkings could be redeveloped as ornamental parks. This will give us a - "Masterplan with a clutter-free roads vision" and improve quality of life for its residents.
